Arts Students Strike Back

To The Editor,
Re: "On Arts and Science"

I feel very sorry for Mr. Edgar. In essence, he contends that his Science program is more difficult than an Arts program. I only have one thing to say, "my Dad can beat up your Dad!" His point is well taken though. It is obvious that his four and a half hours per week of independent writing have done him some good. With that in mind, how can there be a 'whole' in his argument that Science students should not be required to write the Language Competency Test. Well, there does appear to be an explanation, especially if Mr. Edgar is used as an example. While he was 'mortified' to find that Science 'coarses' offered to Arts students are at a ninth grade level, perhaps the university officials became 'mortified' to find some Science students with a grade nine writing level. I no longer indulge in quarreling over which program is more difficult. This is not an admission of Arts inferiority, but rather a recognition that the two sides have different demands of varying degree. It is unfortunate that he has "never had the pleasure of writing one of those wonderfully exciting essays". Actually, after reading his little outburst, it is apparent that he has derived little pleasure from writing anything exciting.

Earl Reid
4th Year History

To the Editor:

Michael Edgar's article in the September 26 edition of Lambda offered few credible arguments to highlight the ongoing debate on the feasibility of an Arts education versus a Science education. While the tone of the article leaves me with the impression that Mr. Edgar will never be swayed from his views that a degree in Chemistry is equivalent to discovering the Holy Grail, I hope he would let a poor, miserable, misguided Arts student offer some constructive criticism to improve his narrow definition of the role of the university.

Mr. Edgar chronicles a "sore spot amongst science buffs" by complaining that he must take two Arts courses while Arts students take only one science course. This line of reasoning is fundamentally flawed. University regulations state that students must take one course each in the Humanities, Social Sciences, and Pure Sciences. A student enrolled in a Social Science discipline like Geography, for example, needs to fulfill his or her Humanities and Pure Science requirements as a condition to graduate. Pure Science students, therefore, must complete one Humanities and one Social Science course to graduate. By failing to understand the division of courses within an Arts program, Mr. Edgar distorts the issue to complain about the supposed injustices that Science students must endure.

The English Competency Test seems to be an element of university life that Mr. Edgar holds in contempt. Ironically, in 1988, the governing body that oversees professional Engineers in the province of Ontario recommended that universities expand their language requirements to include Science students due to the abysmal writing skills of Engineers. Judging by the structure of his article, it would appear that Mr. Edgar's writing skills could use the help that a WAC course offers. A 400 word paragraph that needed to be broken into three separate paragraphs, poor sentence structure, substituting homonyms like "whole" for "hole" and "coarse" for "course," and a meandering style that followed no coherent outline leads me to believe that perhaps Mr. Edgar would justifiably be treated as an "imbecile" by the language supervisors if he was required to write the language test. Proper communication skills are important for any university graduate, and the Competency Test is not an attempt to impose an Arts requirement on Science students.

To conclude, Mr. Edgar seems to relish referring to Arts courses as "memorization and regurgitation of trivial information." Surprisingly, I have yet to read in any newspaper or journal of a groundbreaking discovery by Mr. Edgar radically altering the present boundaries of Chemistry. All undergraduate courses consist of memorizing and researching established facts and theories, and I would argue that disciplines like Chemistry encourage a rigidly orthodox view of subject knowledge to a greater degree than any Arts program. Issues involving legal matters, human motivation, and literature cannot be capsuled into seven thousand mathematical formulas, and a smear campaign against "trivial" courses in the Arts is indefensible. By the way, I find it amazing that someone overworked by labs and classwork, as Mr. Edgar claims he is, actually found time in his incredibly hectic schedule to "sit in" on other courses. I am not, to use Mr. Edgar's word, "appalled" by the arguments proposing the superiority of Science programs. I am, however, extremely gratified that I will never be forced to endure immature, intemperate, and inarticulate students like Mr. Edgar in my "inferior" class schedule.

Respectfully submitted,

Michael Stevenson

Lambda Editor "careless"

Dear Editor,
Re: "Endless Money" - Sept. 19, 1991

I am appalled by the numerous spelling errors made in the above noted article. I counted seventeen! The fact that this article was written by the Editor-In-Chief is even more disturbing.

For instance, Colin James' name was spelled incorrectly throughout the entire article. There is no excuse for such an obvious mistake. You also mentioned when discussing Much Music's taping of the concert: "It is valuable because national exposer is good publicity..." I was at the concert. I must have missed the person who exposed themselves on Much Music.

Unprofessional and careless mistakes are inexcusable. Laurentian students deserve at least minimum standards from their student newspaper. I hope you will make an effort to correct this. Here is a hint: spellchecks do not pick up everything.

Sincerely,
Donna Clark

Production director's note: Unfortunately, typos do occur on a regular basis. We are trying to kick this habit, but it's not that easy. Lambda works on a skeleton staff, trying to meet our deadline for production. Lambda staffers tend to get cooped up in our tiny office until 3 a.m. Tuesday nights, desperately wanting to get the paper finished and to go home and hop in our nice, warm, comfy respective beds. LU students shouldn't have to put up with some of the garbage that goes in this paper, I agree. NEWS FLASH: There is a way that an average LU student can help. If something pisses you off, write a letter, write an article, or take a photo of it. But do something! And finally, get it into us by our deadline: Friday at noon.

SGA Claims of bilingualism disputed...

Dear Editor,

We are writing in regards to the recent information posters the SGA has posted around campus. As a "bilingual" association, it does little to ensure the proper use of French sayings, grammar, and spelling. It is appalling that this is happening when:

- there is a "Bilingual" Director on the SGA executive
 - there is a School of Translators and Interpreters on campus
 - there is a Translator employed by the university.
- Of course, typos can occur, but this is ridiculous.

Was anyone with a basic knowledge of French consulted? I think the answer is obvious.

If you're going to claim to be a "bilingual" association, then be one!

... and defended

Dear Editor,

This letter is in response to the article "AEF Prez wants Francophone U". Personally, I am very offended at the tone and comments made by Perreault. I do not have an "irrational fear that the French want to take over". I feel that this university is unique in offering services in English and French. As an anglophone, I feel that anyone who can speak two languages has an advantage. I have felt very uncomfortable and at a disadvantage when dealing with the OSAP office. I ask a question in English then the individual turns to a co-worker and discusses it in French. At first, I was offended, but then I realized that the person must have felt much more comfortable discussing the situation in French rather than in English. I envy the person who can switch languages so easily. I am sorry that Perreault feels that all French students have tried bilingualism. Because I feel that there are some students who have not or can not. I have not, because, I, unfortunately, do not speak French, just as some students are not confident enough to try their English. At least the SGA is attempting to accommodate everyone. To try to make everyone feel that they belong to one community. The SGA has "attempted to make the dual aspect of Laurentian work". Can AEF say the same? Has the AEF attempted to make me feel more comfortable around francophone students? No. I have never been approached by AEF to explain their point of view or to allow me to have a better understanding of how an anglophone like myself can co-exist with a francophone to make this Canadian society better. In conclusion, Perreault did not make me sympathetic to his cause, but rather made me defensive about an issue I had no problem with before. I feel everyone is entitled to a good education in French or English. I also feel our unique University and SGA are doing their best to bring this language barrier together rather than separate them. Something our government cannot seem to do.

With respect
Julie Lowe

Francophone College to be discussed

Ontario to Begin Discussions with Federal Government on French-Language College Initiative

Ontario Minister of colleges and Universities Richard Allen announced today that ministry officials have been instructed to begin discussions with the federal government on a provincial proposal for the expansion of the French-language college initiative in Ontario.

"Given the economic situation, we need substantial financial help from the federal government," said Dr. Allen. "I want to find out the extent of the federal government's commitment and then we'll be in a position to make some decisions."

Following the establishment of La Cité collégiale, the Ontario government commissioned a study of French-language college services and programs in other areas of the province.

The Bourdeau commission reports released on Nov. 2, 1990 recommend the establishment of two new French-language colleges, one in the North and the other in the Centre/Southwest of the province.

"Certainly, we want Ontario's francophones to have access to postsecondary education in their own language. Improving accessibility of groups that are underrepresented in our postsecondary system is a priority of this government," said Dr. Allen.

"This announcement demonstrates the provincial government's commitment to expanding French-language postsecondary education in Ontario," said the Minister Responsible for Francophone Affairs Gilles Pouliot. "I now hope that these discussions between the provincial and federal governments will be fruitful, for the benefit of all those concerned."

Enrolment is up again

Laurentian's full-time undergraduate enrolment on campus, as of September 16, 1991, is up by a total of 2.7%, or 119 students, as compared to enrolment at November 1, 1990. The figures for the 1991-92 academic year may change, as enrolment is continuing. Part-time enrolment statistics are incomplete at this time.

Total first year, full-time, undergraduate enrolment has increased by 8.6%, or 133 students, to a total of 1,680.

Overall enrolment in the Sciences is up by 14% (79 students). Among first-year, full-time students, enrolment in the Sciences has gone up by 37% (65 students); in Arts - encompassing both Humanities and Social Sciences - the increase is 2.2% (16 students); and in the Professional Schools, it is 8.2% (52 students).

Four programs with limited enrolments - Education, Nursing, Human Movement, and Sports Administration - are completely filled. This represents the first time in Laurentian's history that the Education program has been filled to capacity.

Guardian Drugs™

The Doors From Hell A Brief Commentary : By Kent

Have you noticed that every glass door in the university has either a yellow or a blue stripe pasted across it horizontally? Have you ever wondered what these two colours symbolized, if anything? Did you know that it is a closely guarded secret code? One colour tells you PULL the door open, while the other colour tells you that you must PUSH the door open. Did you also know that there is not a single person on campus who knows which colour means PUSH and which means PULL?

Keeping this in mind, how many times have your hemorrhoids flared up because you have strained with all your might and tried to pull your way through a PUSH door? Or worse yet, have you ever tried to push your way through a PULL door and realized your mistake a fraction of a second too late? By that time there is no stopping your face from slamming into the glass and collapsing inward until the cartilage of your nose impales your brain. Of course you immediately have to pretend that you meant to walk into the door like that so that the people wailing behind you don't think you are a complete dork. Stanching the gushing flow of blood from your nose with a page hastily ripped from your anthropology textbook, you force a laugh through your freshly broken teeth and try to act cavalier about the whole incident. You PULL the door open the second time and then swagger off down the hall, pretending that you do this sort of thing all the time for comic effect and that you truly derive pleasure from making the people around you laugh hysterically. Afterwards, when no one is looking, you have to go back and collect the missing pieces of your teeth for later reconstruction in the privacy of a washroom.

While some people may suggest that it is aesthetical pleasing to have the colourful and totally incomprehensible stripes on all of the doors, I have to disagree. I think that the university should splurge a bit and purchase a few of those PUSH and PULL signs in order to clear up the confusion. After all, most of us Achieved a W.A.C. score between 1 and 3, which seems to suggest that we are exhibiting some signs of literacy. And just think of the money we could save on nose-jobs and Preparation-H.

On Speeding....

Rob Elliott

It's funny. One thinks that when one is driving and receives a ticket it will probably happen on a highway somewhere out of the way, as one zips around a corner, through a barrage of radar waves. The car will be pulled over and two things might happen. Either a ticket will be awarded, or a compassionate officer will let one go with just a warning. Usually the first is the case.

Having never received a ticket, up until last week end, I never worried about it that much. Usually I drive at about 20 km/h over the speed limit, as was the case on the 400 HWY in North York. I was talking to my passengers about my luck in never getting anything but a parking ticket...Big Deal! I remember saying that sooner or later it was everybody's turn but they'd never get me. Too bad there was no wood in my car to knock on.

Turning onto a street in North York, I hadn't noticed the speed limit drop from 70 to 50 just past York University. NAILED! When I realized how fast I was going and the police car appeared in my rear view mirror, lights blaring I started to chant: "I'm dead, I'm dead, I'm dead...", over and over again.

The police officer approached the car. When she told me how fast I was actually going my face turned white, jaw dropped open, and I was reduced to baby talk, "abb duh ne occiffer". But I really did get away with it. I was given a ten over charge (60km/h in a 50 km/h zone), lost no points, and had to pay a measley $28 fine. Fine and dandy for some, but my perfect record was ruined. It could have been much worse. My actual fine would have been over $200 at almost 40 k over the speed limit so I've decided to pass on some hints and tips.

- 1) Throw out the Beer cans.
- 2) Find your insurance (pray it isn't expired)
- 3) Lose control of your lips
- 4) Make your hands shake in a big way.
- 5) Look like a really nice guy.
- 6) Apologize over and over again.
- 7) Tell them you are lost, and from out of town.
- 8) Mention that you'll "...never, ever do it again!"
- 9) Mention your parents killing you.
- 10) Look like the fear of the Lord is in you.
- 11) Say thank you!

I bet if my insurance slip had been ready for presentation instantly, without making her wait for 10 minutes for it while I rifled through my already-too-full glove compartment, she would have let me go. Toronto police people seem nice enough. I think it's just that every day is a dull, bad day, with idiot drivers wrecking traffic patterns for the rest. So, they get even! I don't think she should have given me the ticket, but that's my point of view as it would be your's. Of course, if you've had ten or eleven tickets and you've lost your license a few times (like some people I know...You know who you are!), I don't think divine intervention will help you!

A Voice In The Crowd

Paul D. Bellmore

The question of Canada: One of the greatest challenges our country faces is to remain a country. A lingering of the back of people's and politician's minds above everything else is what will happen to our nation.

The government has just unveiled another constitutional package to finally unify this country (at least on paper) and thus begins the debate.

I always say that I am not really politically inclined and in this piece I will try not to focus on specific issues but an overall ideal.

We live in a great country that often times does not behave like one. We have historically been a peace-loving nation that accepts all cultural backgrounds under the flag of Canada. I have often read things to the extent that instead of a "melting pot" as in the United States that Canada is a "cultural mosaic". Sounds good so far.

Part of the problem is that we are such a diverse nation both in area and in history. The West is the West, you have Quebec and Ontario and the Maritimes. Each region has its own social and economic history. Everyone has needs.

Right now the country seems to be in disarray. There are strikes, overall contempt for the Prime Minister and his party, the constitution as well as the issue of French Canadians and Native peoples'. So are their any solutions?

Well, I have done research in the post and I strongly support the views of former Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau. He felt that when the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was introduced that it would satisfy all groups. It grants Canadians inalienable rights regardless of what or who they are. The current swing suggests that certain groups want powers of self-government. In my mind for a country to be strong it must allow for flexibility (through provincial governments) but should be unified under one law. If extra powers are granted to one region the Constitution as well as the Charter could be over ruled. In the ideal sense no one region or people's should stand above the country as a whole.

We live in one of the greatest societies on. We should be proud of our freedom as well as all the facets of the "Canadian Identity". It is not only Native people or French-Canadian but all those who chose to immigrate or come here and live in the are a known as Canada.

I think people still have a strong belief in this country but they are tiring. Politicians must keep the federal union strong but allow leverage to meet the needs of all Canadians coast to coast. It can be done. We must think rationally and be aware of differing people's attitudes.

The Soviet Union seems to be falling apart as different areas state their independence. Unless our conflicts are resolved that could verify well happen in our own country. Divided; we would have no land to honor and no Flag to stand under. I pray the day never comes.

Until words meet.....

VEES DRAG QUEEN'S

By: Alex McGregor

It was 1:45 p.m. on Saturday that the turning point of the weekend series was reached. Our Voyageurs had played to a goalless first half against Queen's. No contrary to some opinions the Vees had not been outplayed by the Golden Gaels of Queen's. No the Vees had as many chances as Queen's The Vees had been outplayed for ten minutes. Sterling defensive work by Eric (Pumpkin) Frost and Karl (Stick) Franke had nullified any real threat. But still your Vees looked a mite sluggish.

The lads lay on the ground and Kindly Ole Coach Greg Zorbas said, "Look- the worst that can happen is that we lose. So this is only game four. Why don't you relax- go out and enjoy yourselves and have a good half."

The rest as they say is history. The lads went out enjoyed themselves and won 2-0. The details? The game started with a crowd unofficially estimated as 1 001. (Hi Mark ?) Just enough for a head shave. Our new President Dr. Ross Paul kicked off with a blast to goal keeper Steve (Bull) Barich. The Bull handled the carom without flinching. That was the case the entire weekend. Queen's, led by their experienced leader Corn Hole threw everything at us. They were fierce- and dirty. The preppy thugs did nothing for their university- and min (need I add Queen's '60). Kicking scratching and clawing they went after our gentlemanly Vees. The rough stuff was handled most discreetly and honourably by Ken (Killer) Heinrich. The Killer would go up whenever some unpleasantness threatened to erupt from Queen's and asked innocently, "Is there a problem here?" No problem. Finis! Therefore Kindly Coach Zorbas threw the Killer into the forward line in place of the ailing Todd (Bruce) Sindrey- still the most gorgeous player in the O.U.A.A.. The Killer flicked a ball forward. An overanxious Preppy defender threw himself at it. James (Snuffy) McLaren stopped it, shielded it and cracked it past the Preps goaltender. Vantage L.U.

Snuffy made a run towards the sidelines and pointed to his granny (O.K. his Mammy's Mammy) Mrs. V. Clarke who flew in two days earlier from the Toonheid in Glasgow Scotland to sheer her favourite wean, wee Snuffy McLaren. The crowd roared, President Paul clapped, Vice President Ron smiled- Vantage Mrs Clarke and Toonheid.

Queen's pressed desperately. Gone was the easy assurance that comes from dressing nice, talking dirty and kicking Proles around. Now was the fierce anger of the bourgeoisie when their supremacy is threatened. Again it was Van (Wheels) Zorbas-over to the Killer. The killer flipped it on. Snuffy McLaren faked right, wheeled left and cracked it past Preppy and the disconsolate CornHole. All this with two preps smashing him while Sudbury referee looked on.

Again a victory run to the sidelines. Again the Snuffy finger pointing to his Granny Mrs. Clarke. Again the roar of the crowd Double Vantage to Mrs. Clarke and Auld Yins of the Toonheid-Glasgow Scotland.

Sunday was even more fierce. This time the Upper Class were determined to put us Proled in out lower class lower case. This time it was the Proles from L.U. who won out in every area. The Stick Man was cool calm and collected. The pride of U.C. Neil (crystal) Crawford the old Surgeon himself was back in his usual stopper position which suits him better than mid-field Darren (Ross) LaBrash and Lee Hairdresser Goodwin held the Preps scoreless.

L.U. pressed. Todd (Bruce) Sindrey-still pretty damned gorgeous to me-flipped the ball to James Snuffy. Snuffy made the perfect pass to Eric (Arty) Frost. The pumpkin iced it and - and the Vees went on to win. The officiating on Sunday wasn't bad but the linesmen made two brutal calls that could have cost us the match and first place.

Our fans were numerous, raucous and in a party mood. Thanks to all of you. You gave us a lovely weekend. Let's do it again this weekend when we play Carleton. Thanks President Ross Paul. By day he is University President. By weekend he turns into a super soccer stud with a mean right foot. Thanks to Mrs. Clark- the toast of the Toonheid and Laurentian University, Luv Ya Sweetheart.

Live, from Sudbury, this is SPADLINE. The lads would like to question had you name Larry Myricks as the last person to defeat Carl Lewis in a long jump begin this edition of "the LINE" by congratulating PHED student Tara competition before Mike Powell crushed Carl and the world record at the recent world championships.

Chester who was the winner of trivia #1. Tara received a custom embroidered TRIVIA MASTER t-shirt courtesy of Rocks Athletic Wear. For all those who submitted correct answers but did not win, the lads would like to encourage you to deep on entering 'cause we're giving out one shirt every week. The only thing that could be better would be winning the blue light fridge Labatts is offering, but what is Lachance of that!

In last week's trivia #2 we wanted you to name the Babe as the only major leaguer ever to have back to back 50 home run seasons. And speaking of back to back home runs, it was the Jays interim manager Gene Tenace who cracked taters in his first two World Series at bats. Our third

News from SPAD is that annual football tournament is happening on Friday October 4. Action gets under way at 1 P.M. at the phys. ed. field. We'd like to see everybody in SPAD out to this event 'cause rumor has it that the Stampeder fans are gonna be puttin' on a clinic for Bob!

On now to trivia #3. Don't forget to drop off your answers along with your name and phone number to room 104 MSR, or in the SPADLINE trivia box located outside the SPAD office in the phys. ed. centre.

Till next week, 2 SPAD lads

Let's face it, using you abdominizer by yourself in front of the television is a bit of a boring way to keep that tummy under control. Why not join LU EXERDANCE, where you will have a great time, meet lots of exciting new people (LU EXERDANCE is Co-ed!), and get back into shape?

LU EXERDANCE is an intramural event so it will run during the lunch block and is open to all LU full-time and part-time students, staff, and faculty members.

Keep an eye out for articles in Lambda and posters around campus for more information on registration, dates, and other specifics. This is one event you don't want to miss!

Dear/ Cher Pierre

Cher Pierre,

I am this incredibly good looking young woman. I'm blonde, blue eyed, 5'4", 98 lbs, and have a perfect figure. This probably doesn't sound like a problem but it is. Guys are always fighting over me. They bloody each others noses to impress me so I'll talk to one of them. It drives me crazy, and it's completely immature. How do I get them to stop so I can meet a truly nice guy?

Blonde Bombshell

Cher Blonde Bombshell,

I'd say dye your hair, get brown coloured contacts, don't wear heels, gain fifty pounds and add some love handles. Try getting your boobs reduced. If all else fails, get a sex change!

Pierre

Cher Pierre,

Sometimes I just don't feel fresh! This pungent odour follows me everywhere. It's very embarrassing.

Odourfully-Mouldy

Cher Odourfully-Mouldy,

Your letter is unclear, but I would say: Either douche, or check your jock strap and undies for skid marks.....maybe even wash them.

Pierre

Cher Pierre,

How do you get rid of unsightly nose hair? Snot gets caught in it and it hurts to pull it out?

Booger

Cher Booger,

Got a lighter with a big flame?

Pierre

Cher Pierre,

Is it bad to stare at my neighbours Collie in a sexual way? Just Curious.

I Luv Lassie

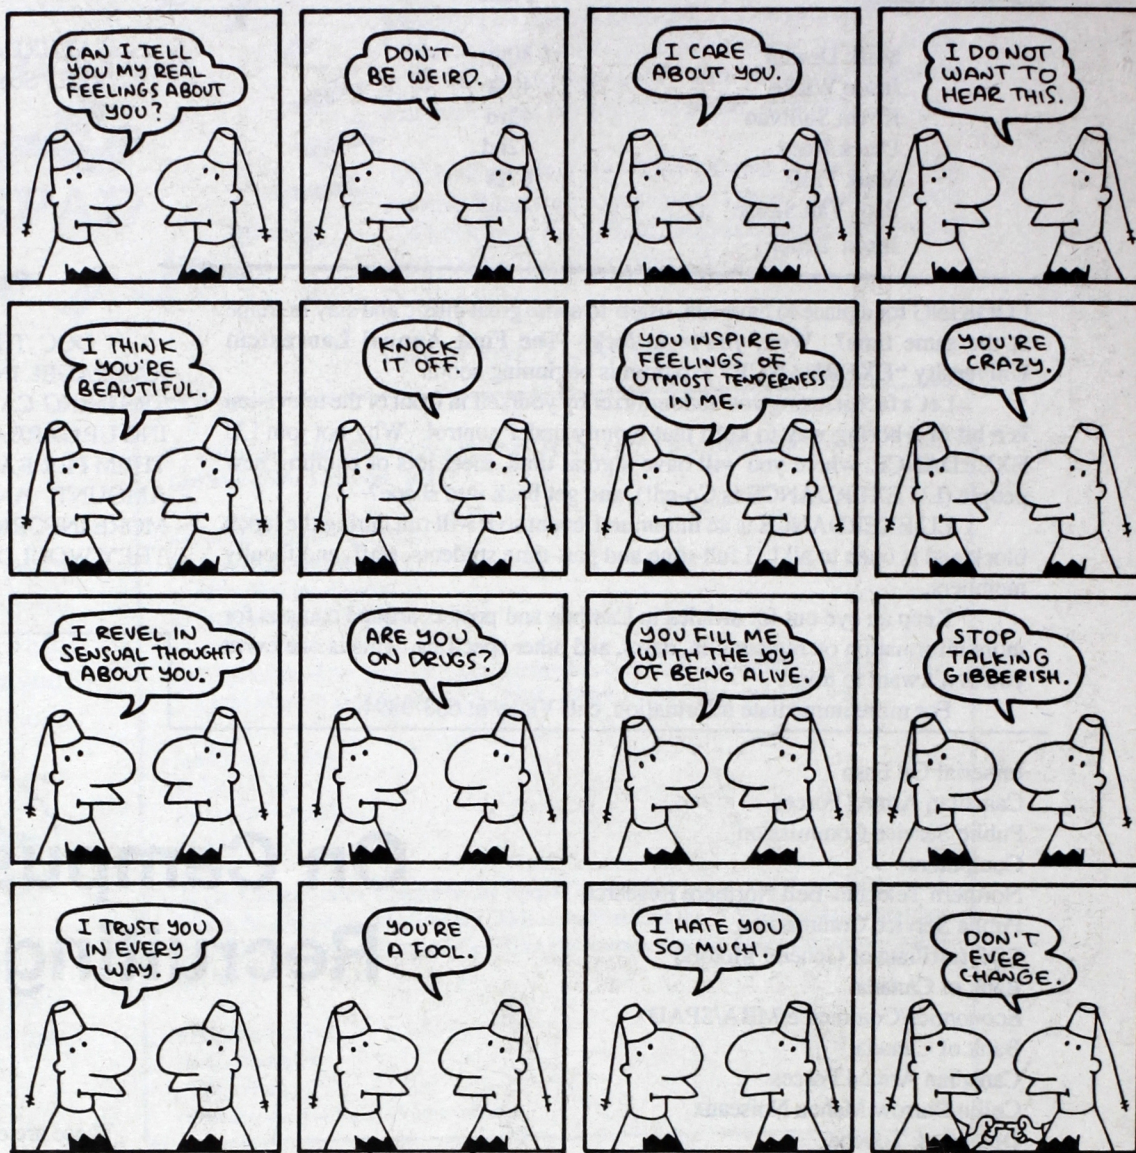

Cher I Luv Lassie,

Is the bitch big, bad tempered and does she have fangs?

THE LIBRARY REPLIES

by
The Amiable Librarian

This column is based on Questions/Suggestions received by the library. If you would like to contribute, please fill out a Questions/Suggestions sheet near the exit of the J.N. Desmarais Library, or, see the Amiable Librarian

Question: The fine for late books is unreasonable. We are students and not millionaires. I do accept some responsibility for returning the books late, but I don't feel I should have to pay $1.00 for every day I am late. Also valid reasons for late returns do exist. I hope that in future this policy will be changed to something more reasonable.

Reply: The fines are stiff—no doubt about it—but they can be avoided. As the noted U.S. Judge, Harold T. Stone, of Night court fame recently noted: "All those in favour of avoiding speeding tickets, please raise their right foots."

Seriously, the Amiable Librarian agrees that valid reasons for late returns do exist, and you can explain your situation to the Circulation Supervisor. However, the library staff deals daily with students who desperately need particular books to complete assignments and they are unable to do so because the books they need are overdue. An effective fine system will ensure the return of books but the charges should not be so high that they cannot be paid. If our system of fines does not meet this standard, it should be reviewed.

Question: Si les journaux arrivent aux rayons en retard d'une journée ou plus, pourquoi ne pas demander des copies gratuites du jour précédent au lieu d'une souscription. Bref, à quoi sert un journal en retard vu la rapidité des événements.

Réponse: La bibliothèque reçoit plusieurs journaux. Un abonnement à chacun d'eux est le procédé le plus efficace d'en faire l'acquisition de façon continue. La cause du retard réside dans le mode de livraison. Tous les journaux arrivent par la poste. Une fois reçus, ils sont placés sur les rayons le jour même!

Dans une bibliothèque universitaire, les journaux ne servent pas seulement à garder les lecteurs à la fine pointe de l'actualité. Ils ont une valeur historique. Sinon, pourquoi se donner la peine de répertorier leurs articles dans les index et de les microfilmer?

Question: Why does interlibrary loan need a specific book title? Last year, I waited one and a half months for information on Greek Architecture (far past the deadline for my essay). Fortunately my professor allowed me to present my topic at a later date.

Reply: Unfortunately, lending libraries will not conduct subject searches. They lend only specific titles when asked. If you are having problems locating specific titles on any topic, please see the Amiable Librarian for help. In the case of Greek architecture, you would have been directed to the Art Index (INDEX N a A78), which contains numerous references on this topic (some of which, as it turns out, are located in the J.N. Desmarais Library)

Question: I am outraged. I just received an article which I requested on inter-library loan and you people charged me $4.50 even though it was one page long and I can't even read it because it is in German. That's highway robbery!

Reply: The Amiable Librarian hates to see unhappy customers—especially if there is not much that can be done about it. The Amiable Librarian reads Chinese, Finnish, Italian, Spanish, Polish, and Russian. Even French and English. But German, that's a different matter. For help with language, you might have to go to one of our staff, or a faculty member. Next time, of course, it might be worth checking the language of the article before you order it.

As to the ILL charges, you should know that on May 1, 1991, the Ontario Council of University Librarians raised the fee for articles received via interlibrary loan from $3.00 to $4.50 no matter whether the articles were 1 page or 30. (If the articles go from 31 pages to 60, the rate doubles to $9.00). Your one-page article, in other words, costs the same as a 30 pager.

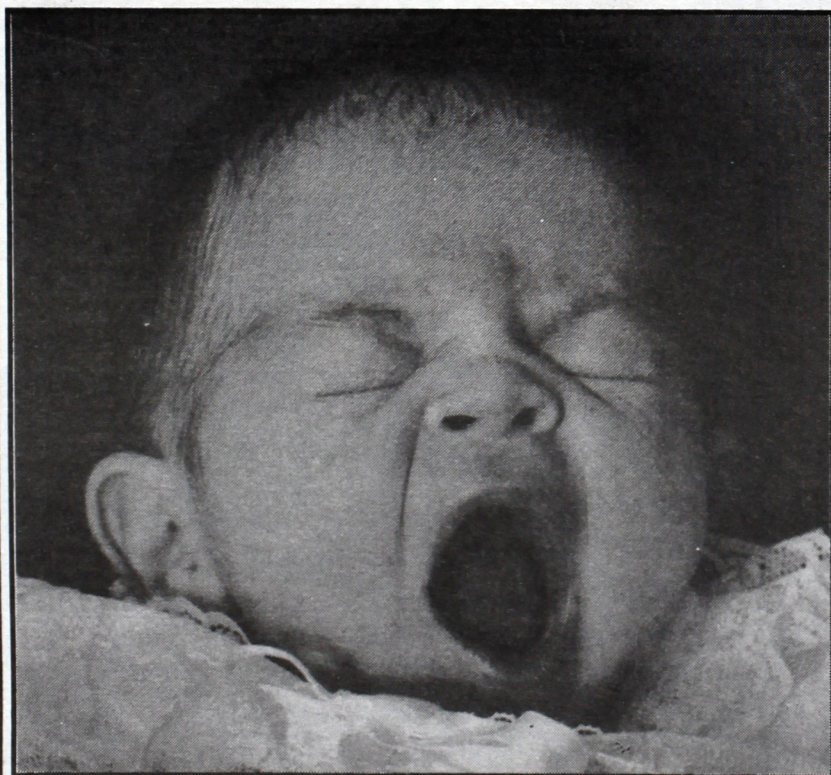

To repeat: the Laurentian University Library has no control over this fee since it was set provincially.

The bright side to inter-library loan service, of course, is that as a general rule there are no charges for books. Even though titles are not available in the library, they will be obtained from other libraries not only in Ontario, but across Canada, and if necessary around the world.

The reason there is generally no charge for books, at least for those obtained from Ontario and Quebec, is that the users must return the ones received within two or three weeks whereas with articles, they get to keep these articles indefinitely. Of course, that feature is particularly attractive when the users can read the articles they receive!

September 27, 1991

Don't get caught napping!

Library fines for late returns are as follows:

Regular Loan

$1.00 PER DAY to a maximum of $30.00 per item
plus a $5.00 PER ITEM Service Charge if a statement is issued
.....

Reserve Material

•• 2 hour reserve material••
$0.50 PER HOUR to a maximum of $30.00 per item
•• 1, 3, or 7 day loan••
$2.00 PER DAY to a maximum of $30.00 per item
plus a $5.00 PER ITEM service charge if a statement is issued
.....

Please Note: This fine is only for late returns. If an item is Lost -- one is required to pay the Replacement Cost of the item plus a $5.00 Service Charge if a statement is issued.
The minimum replacement cost is $20.00 plus a $5.00 Service Charge if a statement is issued.

ALL LIBRARY PRIVILEGES ARE SUSPENDED UNTIL ALL FINES AND/OR CHARGES ARE PAID.

MR. GREEN

Demagogue or a Legitimate Student Representative.

Mr. Green has this wonderful way about himself. He's like... Gorbachev. Perhaps the best way to explain this comparison is to examine his response to Chris Land's concern about the rising expenditures of the SGA. Right of the bat, in the second paragraph, he takes an approach very similar to the Russian's response to the striking Siberian miners. He thanked Lambda, as Gorbachev did to the miners, for taking the initiative into their own hands. This is very skillful.

Despite being the decision maker and the target of public pressure, he managed to get the sympathy of Lambda and the SGA members by simply addressing the obvious error. Once again, it is very skillful. To the political science and ideological philosophy buffs, this behaviour is outlined in the writings of Antonio Gramsci; the Italian communist who had the most pragmatic and indeed progressive approach to "applying" communism. He refined Marx's and Lenin's approach. Stalin should have listened to him, Gorbachev did. Perhaps Mr. Green should change his major!

However, the is also the little comment about Lambda and it's purpose which Mr. Green seemed to limit to a watch dog institution should be expanded. Lambda is much more. This paper is not some organization which is limited to helping on elitist group of over-achievers, fattening on their hedonism, while playing individual office politics to further their careers. Lambda is not a polarized mouthpiece for individuals or organizations spewing forward their rhetorical propaganda either.

Despite the fact that numerous groups have attempted to influence and control Lambda, the masthead still states that Lambda "remains editorially autonomous for all University organizations, both student and administrative". This editorial autonomy is even greater than media out in the real world. If the members of this staff, or any future Lambda staff, will make a conscious choice to reflect a certain extreme view of the society, as it occurred last school year with the reprinting of the homosexual rights article from the Muse, they will not have to apply self censorship in order to save their careers and the lifestyle of their families. Therefore, this paper has the opportunity to be more extreme than the mainstream media. There are few student papers in Canada that have these privileges; Lambda is one of them.

While Lambda has become a financial watchdog only as an extension of its public mandate, it is much more. It is not limited to watching the SGA. It is Laurentian's very own pedestal for freedom of speech, and any other "fluff" as Chris Land puts it. It is, as the editorial staff continues propagating, the public forum for this intimate little community.

There also has to be the explanation of Mr. Green's political savvy in the excuse he uses to compensate for this mismanagement of public money. Although it is absolutely true that Laurentian student body is apathetic. After all, the newspaper is an expression of the Laurentian apathy. Actually, after seeing the populous turnout at the Alumni parade one wonders if anybody ever graduated from Laurentian. Perhaps, it is only a historical lack of enthusiastic school spirit. "We [the SGA Executive] are guilty in judgement" as Mr. Green states is, however, a smokescreen distraction. Mea culpe, is not enough, though commendable. You have the rest of the year for penance.

The Executive is not so much guilty of misjudging the extent of Laurentian apathy. Instead they are guilty of not informing its members of the financial risks taken through bringing in a reputable act. Maybe, the result would have been better. Then again, the situation might have been the same.

The real bad news is that this loss will result in "eliminating services, reducing programming and cutting cost right across the board". This part sounds really familiar. It is rather fortunate that Lambda is financed directly by an SGA student levy of ten dollars. Otherwise, Laurentian might have been one paper less or one skeleton of what it is now. There have been precedents for cutting such organizations.

Yet it is commendable, that Mr. Green continues to emphasize that the SGA should extend its mandate to more significant aid to its members. The extent of this new mandate is still a bit of a gray area to be exposed in the future. A word of suggestion, if the Executive has problems financing its new bold assistance programs, perhaps the money put away for the new office furniture in three term deposits, should be designated for the public good.

In conclusion the sympathetic Lambda staffers would like to thank Mr. Green for outlining our new watch dog responsibility. We feel privileged with this honour. Yet what you did is a bit of injustice by bringing up the last years April fools edition, the UnLambda. Although some of the members of the current staff, were part of that production, as you were the vice-president of the SGA. Chris Land did not bring up Marc Veno's fiscal management. However, since we're on the topic of the last year, the advertising revenue in UnLambda, more then covered the cost of printing!

With that in mind; ...Dasviedania!
